

The Class of Nineteen-Nineteen

By Professor James S. King.

The picture that accompanies this sketch speaks more eloquently than my pen. It declares that President Kerfoot has succeeded in bringing to Hamline the largest freshman class in the history of the institution. It declares that a high measure of success has attended the summer campaign. It declares that Kerfoot, Jr. and Moe, by persuasive argument, and Holmes, Stromme and Ledbetter, thru persuasive song, have turned the thoughts of many toward Hamline. It declares, too, that a loyal student body has stood by the institution, and that a devoted body of graduates has not been idle or indifferent. Lastly, it means that a well-planned, systematic campaign has been pushed with utmost diligence from the president's office. When we take into consideration the keen competition that is abroad in the state, how each high school graduate is solicited by business schools, normals, colleges and universities and how even high schools are adding a fifth year to carry students thru, or partly thru, the freshman year of college work, then the achievement of securing two hundred freshmen for Hamline U. assumes its proper proportions.

Well, it is here, this new-born babe. We found it on our college doorstep Tuesday morning, September 13.

Among our Germanic ancestors with whom life was a stern matter, with food scarce and much fighting to be done, the fate of the new-born child hung upon the father's decision. At its birth he was called in. If in his judgment the child was sound and gave promise of a sturdy, vigorous life, he took it into his arms and honey was smeared upon its lips and it thereby entered into all the rights of the family and the tribe. If, on the other hand, it was deformed or appeared weak or sickly, he left it lying; and it was later carried out upon the hillside and abandoned there for the gods to provide for.

This lusty, freshman babe has passed its initial examination. Hamline has taken it into her arms and has touched its lips with the honey of a sincere welcome and God-speed in the big business of getting ready for man's estate. The Hamline family has received this new-comer into its circle, and extends to it all the prerogatives of sonship and daughterhood. Like all babes, too, it has become the biggest member of the family, demands more time, consumes more energy, and occupies more space than any of its older brothers or sisters.

Then too, like all classes of such splendid dimensions, this class is widely representative. They come from north, south, east and west; and some, I am sure, come from above. Naturally, Minnesota furnishes most; but Canada, the Dakotas, Iowa, and the western fringe of Wisconsin furnish their contingents. Some are tall, some stubby; some lean, some stout; some blond, some brunette; some are athletic, some musical, some religious, and some even studious.

It is asserted, and we believe it, that, in this class, there is unusual talent. Already some have fought for H. U. on the gridiron, some have sung for us in chapel and in church, and some have recited for us in the class-room. The samples are all good. Some of the state champions in high school debate are among them and orators of no mean ability. Knowing of their excellent qualifications, we await eagerly their entrance into all the varied and wholesome activities of the college.

An especially delightful feature of this freshman class is the presence of the possessors of such names as McCrea, Farrar, Cahoon, Barnum, Harvey, Lindsay and Phillips. Surely this is proof sufficient of the loyalty of the H. U. graduates of twenty years ago and more. It speaks out more clearly than anything else could the faith these sons and daughters of Hamline have in the H. U. of today. It is Hamline coming back to Hamline.

And may we add in closing that we believe this confidence in their alma mater on the part of "old Hamline Grads" is in no wise misplaced. The Hamline of today is far stronger than the Hamline of yesterday, and the Hamline of tomorrow will rise high above the Hamline of today.

HAMLIN'S FRESHMAN CLASS

Two hundred minds and hearts; two hundred types of thoughts and emotions to be touched by the wand of the college spirit! Each one who has ever come within the sacred realm of the Hamline spirit has had within him a distinctive soul light. This light the spirit does not change; but when, after four years, this one-time freshman goes forth, the spirit has made the light that burned darkly burn brightly. So too, these two hundred will go forth with two hundred types of thoughts and emotions, but the light now dimmed by uncertainty and indecision will have become a steady flame of courage and purpose.
